😬 Caught on camera 😬

Earlier this month, at KCD Warsaw, I shamelessly used my keynote to rant about the current definition of #observability, and to share my own definition.

Apparently I was caught on camera in the act 😬

I also ranted about other common misconceptions, and said what I've been saying for years now:

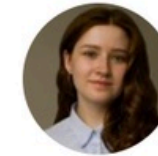

observability is about data analytics!

What does it mean? What's the new definition?

Thanks for letting me rant on stage, and for the cool photo (and event!)

KCD Warsaw -- what an EPIC start to my #kcd community journey! I'm so happy it began there. The vibes were incredibly supportive and thriving all around. Must confess, I was nervous because my topic is pretty niche, but to my immense happiness, the room was packed! 🎉 And even more pleasing, we had such interesting discussions on Q&A and at the after party (best place to have discussions in my humble opinion)
A massive thanks to the wonderful organizing team for having me, and huge kudos to my fellow speakers. All the talks were awesome and so much fun to attend.
I'm not sure I'll be able to tag everyone I had the pleasure of talking to, but I'll do my best. Thanks again, and I hope to see you all soon!

A couple weeks ago I had a blast presenting "The Infinite Hotel: Scaling Multi-Tenant Platforms through a Unified API" for the last time at KCD Warsaw.

I just wanted to thank the event organizers for the opportunity, as well as all the attendees who joined the talk!

Thanks also to my dear friend Andrzej Kaczyński for showing me around Warsaw and for sharing his culture and cuisine.

Two weeks ago, I had the amazing opportunity to speak at KCD Warsaw, my first time ever presenting at a Kubernetes Community Days event! 🎤

I delivered a talk on Multi-Scheduler Kubernetes, diving into how multiple schedulers can improve workload management, flexibility, and governance in complex environments using schedulers.

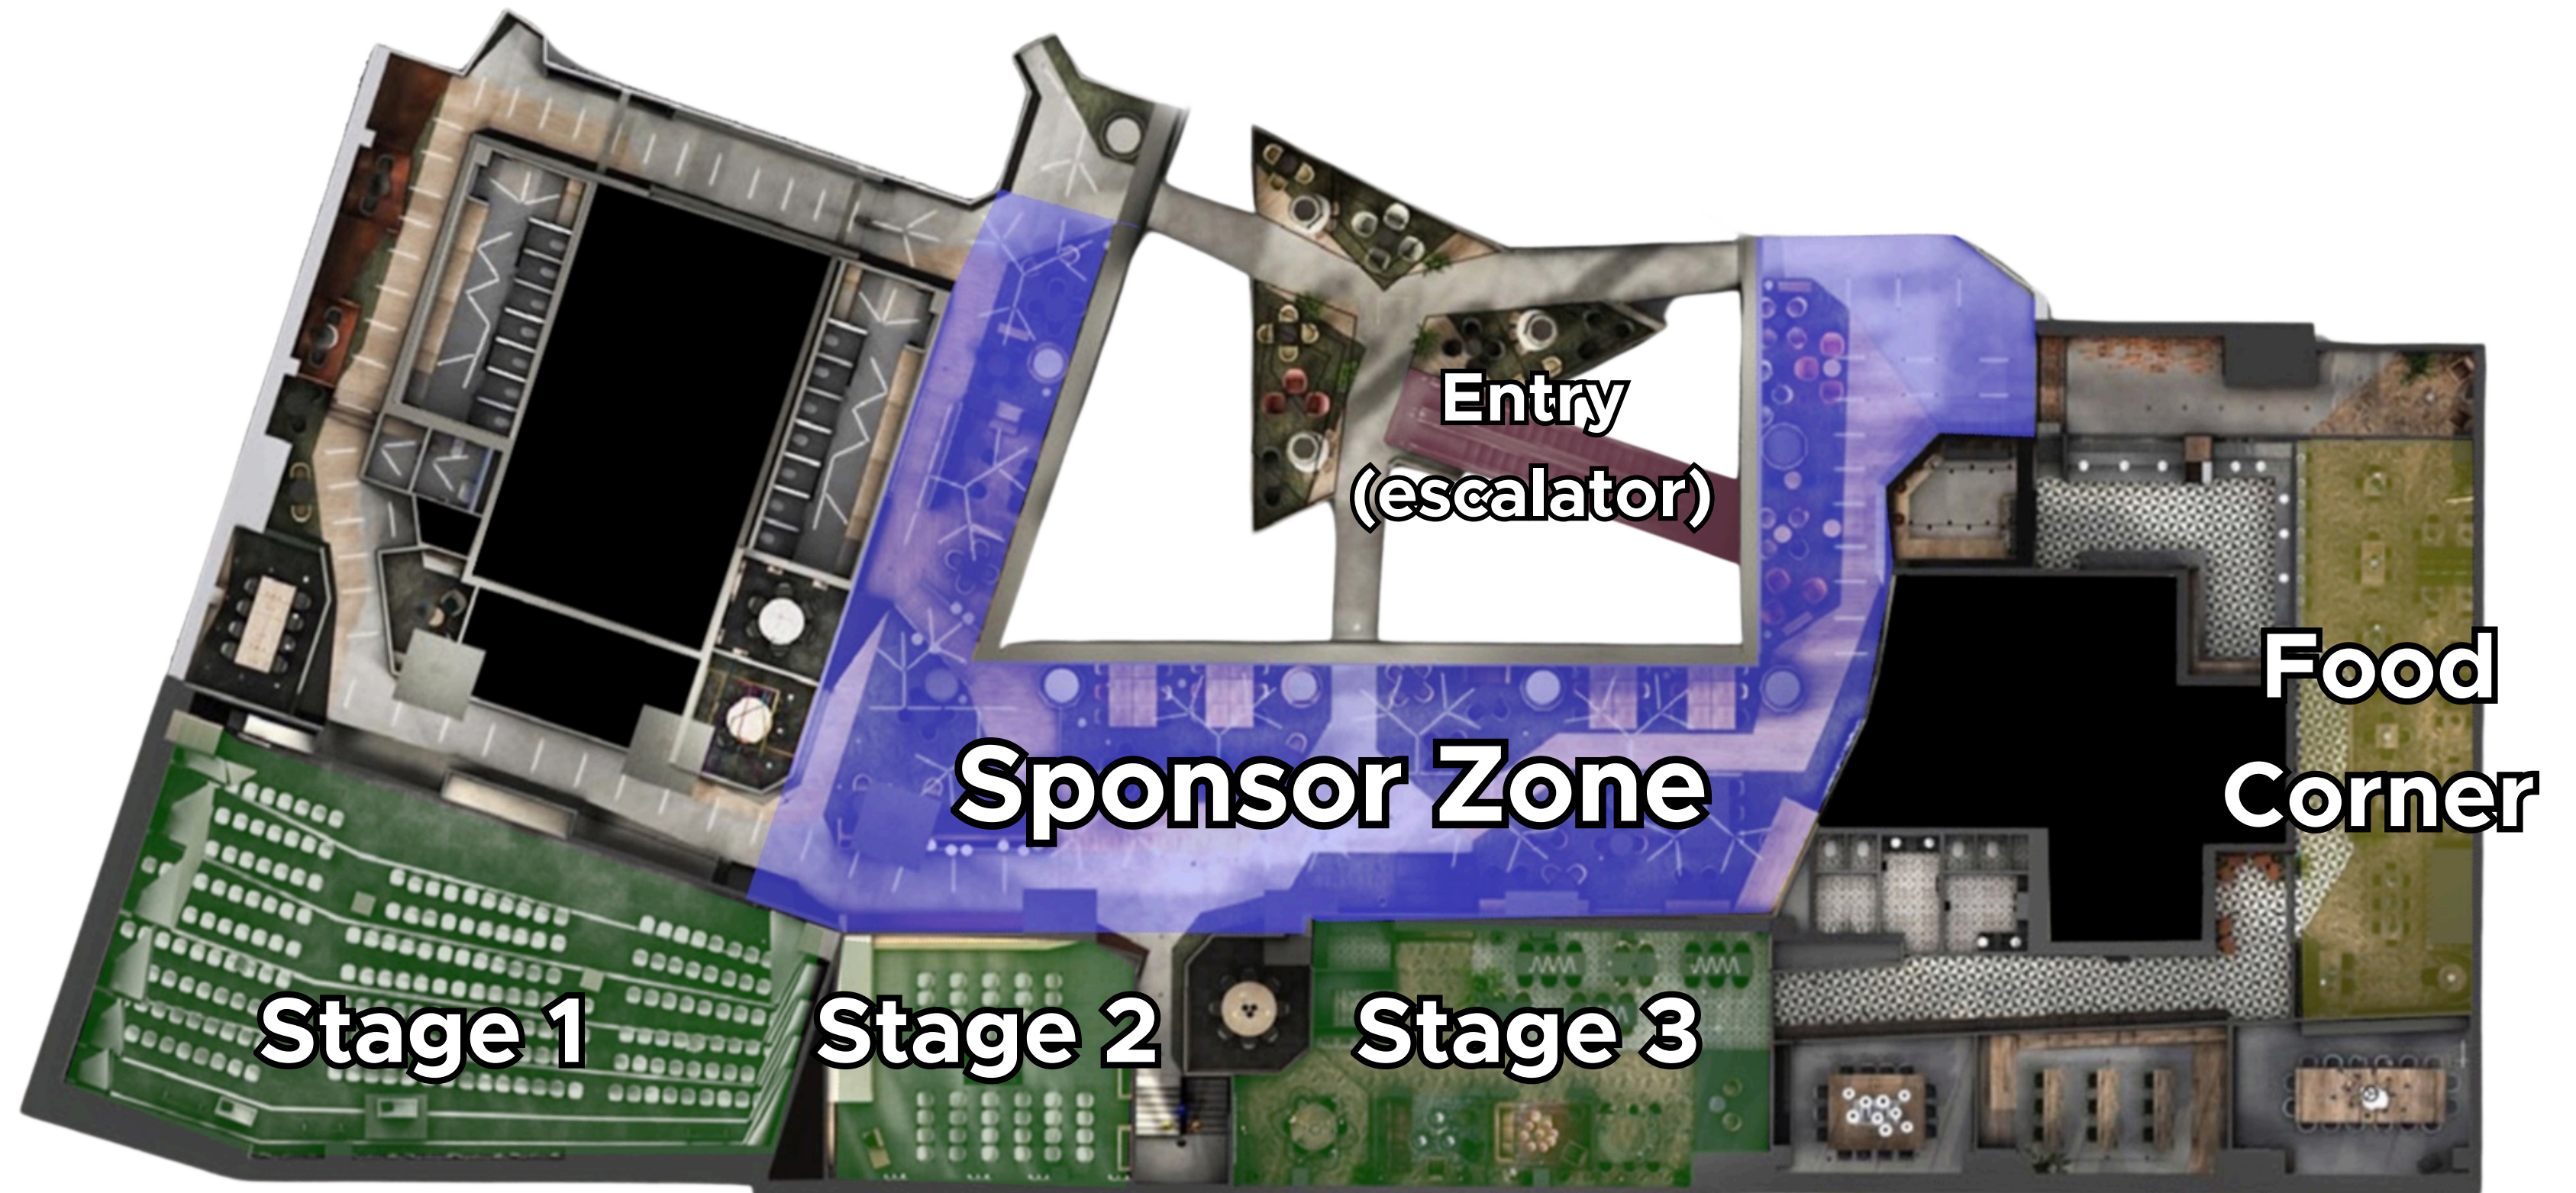

It was such an incredible experience, from the engaged audience, to the fantastic organisers, speakers' dinner, and after-party that made the whole event even more memorable.

A huge thank-you to the KCD Warsaw organizers, fellow speakers, and everyone who attended my session. Your energy and curiosity made it truly special! 🙌💙
